

Staging reciprocity and mobilizing networks in working families

Author: Karen V. Hansen

Persistent link: <http://hdl.handle.net/2345/4097>

This work is posted on eScholarship@BC,
Boston College University Libraries.

Berkeley, CA: Center for Working Families, University of California, Berkeley, 2002

Use of this resource is governed by the terms and conditions of the Creative Commons "Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 3.0 United States" (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/3.0/us/>)

Staging Reciprocity and Mobilizing Networks in Working Families

Karen V. Hansen, Ph.D.

*Berkeley Center for Working Families
Working Paper No. 33
April 2002*

*Karen V. Hansen is an Associate Professor of Sociology at Brandeis University and was a postdoctoral researcher at the Center for Working Families from 1999-2000.

©2000 Center for Working Families, University of California, Berkeley

Abstract

Based on in-depth case studies of family networks in Northern California, this article explores the conditions under which working families successfully mobilize networks, and those under which they fail. It analyzes how working parents mobilize networks to help them care for their school-aged children.

Members within the care-giving networks I studied continuously calibrated the extent to which their needs registered on a scale of importance and immediacy. Network members analyzed the context and assessed peoples' commitments, needs, intentions, and capacities in light of their own. Perceptions of value and worth were fundamental to the social construction of fairness and balance. Through this process of perception, valuation, and interpretation, they constructed reciprocity.